

2005 Rocky Mountain Region 7 Workshop

Pathways to Success

Developing Innovative and Exciting Interpretive Services

Utah State University
Logan, Utah
March 3-6, 2005

The Rocky Mountain Region of the National Association for Interpretation invites you to attend their 2005 Regional Workshop, March 3-6, 2005, at Utah State University in Logan, Utah.

The workshop theme is "Pathways to Success: Developing Innovative and Exciting Interpretive Services." We will gather to share our collective wisdom as interpreters at many different stages in our careers. We will showcase the projects and research of the students and professors at Utah State University.

This workshop will explore many aspects of interpretation – natural, cultural, environmental, historical, personal, and non-personal – and discover ways to make our facilities and services a great success. We'll share methods and techniques and use examples of successful endeavors to enhance our abilities within our profession. Gaining a greater understanding of how we can connect our services to our increasingly diverse audiences is an important goal of this workshop.

During the workshop, we'll visit and explore some of the interpretive facilities in the Logan area, such as the Hardware Ranch with its wonderful wildlife viewing opportunities.

A Certified Interpretive Guide Workshop is being presented at the Hogle Zoo in Salt Lake City as a pre-workshop event. Registration information is included in this packet. People registering for both the CIG training and the regional workshop will receive a discount on both registrations.
